ABSTRACT

Marlatt, R. B., and Alfieri, S. A., Jr. 1981. Hosts of a parasitic alga, Cephaleuros Kunze, in Florida. Plant Disease 65:520-522.

This first updated list of hosts in the U.S.A. of the parasitic alga, Cephaleuros Kunze, includes 157 species and cultivars belonging to 54 plant families. The alga was found on trunks, stems, leaves, and fruits, and 34 hosts exhibited obvious injury.

Cephaleuros Kunze is the most studied genus of plant pathogenic algae and the most damaging to crops and ornamentals. It occurs on cultivated and wild plants in neotropical areas from North Carolina to Argentina (8) and also in Africa, Asia, and Australia (3). Batista and Lima (1) listed 448 hosts of Cephaleuros in Pernambuco, Brazil, and Holcomb (2) reported 145 hosts in Louisiana. The Brazilian list did not mention the plant organs on which Cephaleuros was found or distinguish unaffected hosts from those that were damaged by the alga. These additional observations are included in the following list, along with the counties where Cephaleuros was found in Florida.

Most of the hosts and the alga were identified by plant pathologists of the Florida Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services, and most of the plant specimens were sent to them by the department's plant inspectors. Thus, the number of specimens received from a county may reflect the alga's relative occurrence, inspection efficiency, and interests of nurserymen and homeowners. Other sources of information included bulletins and journals (4-6,9).

This updated list of Cephaleuros hosts in Florida reveals the great diversity of its 157 species and cultivars, including ferns, cycads, palms, a grass, and a wide range of broadleaf plants. The alga occurs on leaves, stems, and fruits. Thirty-four hosts had very obvious injuries, including necrosis of the entire leaf area under a thallus, constriction or swelling of branches, and bark cracks. No pathogenicity tests were performed, however, and host injury was assumed to be due to Cephaleuros. An earlier list of Cephaleuros hosts was included in a Florida plant disease index (7).

Families and genera are listed alphabetically, followed by the host's common name and the plant organ on which the alga was found, if recorded. Host injury is indicated by an asterisk after the organ. If known, counties in which a host was found are listed under the host's name.
